Chief Executive Officer Teemu Huuhtanen:

Next Games continued to build future foundations in 2018 as a continuation of its efforts from 2017. The company has furthered its strategic investments into its technology and analytics platforms as well as Google Maps technology integration. Next Games continues to invest into the utilization of machine learning, artificial intelligence and productization of generic game features for fast reutilization in future games. These investments will allow the company to enjoy the benefits of scale in the future, as the existing technology and tools will decrease time to market for the company's products.

The company also carried out a transition to IFRS accounting standard, which allows Next Games to report comparable financial figures to other games companies, according to international standards. The Company believes that a function based Profit and Loss Statement is more informative for stakeholders.

The first half of the year the company largely focused on preparing for the launch of our second title, the innovative location-based augmented reality game, The Walking Dead: Our World, which launched on July 12, as well as the ongoing development of Blade Runner Nexus and other games in our pipeline.

The company made significant marketing investments into The Walking Dead: Our World on a global scale in pursuit of significant revenue growth. Due to technical challenges, which now have been resolved, the company however had to scale back marketing investments on a much lower level than anticipated as the challenges significantly affected the game's functionality and therefore also revenue stream.

The fourth quarter of the year we focused on a turnaround project after a challenging third quarter. The company took immediate corrective measures, minimizing expenditure and stabilizing our cash position from 8.8 million euros at the end of the third quarter to 7.3 million euros at the end of the fourth quarter.

After the reporting period, the company initiated consultation proceedings, which were concluded on the 15th of February, and resulted in scaling the company's headcount down to 117 positions. As a part of the turnaround project and renewed focus, we also reviewed our game development pipeline. After the reporting period in January 2019, Next Games and Universal Games and Digital Platforms came to an agreement over terminating their collaboration on the game project that had proceeded to production. Simultaneously, we will put more focus on the early stages of game concepting and development. Consequently, the company has kicked off a new game project, which does not have an external IP attached to it at the moment.

We will further continue to streamline our operations and costs towards future profitability. This includes a renewed focus on our game development process and related costs and smart reuse of gameplay mechanics and technologies we've already built. We have also taken significant steps in improved risk management measures as well as further development of our ways of working.

Our shared Games-as-a-Service technology platform has matured during the year. During the third quarter, in conjunction with The Walking Dead: Our World launch, we encountered technical challenges. These challenges were largely solved during the third and fourth quarter and the platform was able maintain the level of service expected from it. Towards the end of the year the technology team's focus shifted to optimizing the costs of the platform and the ability to run multiple games on it in a cost effective way. Some new features were also introduced for supporting upcoming titles such as Blade Runner Nexus.

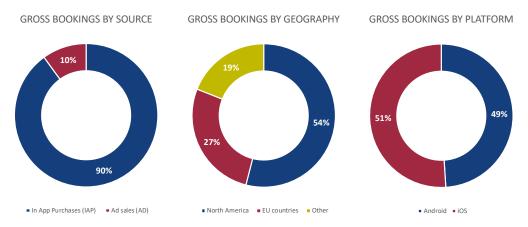

I expect the company's turnaround project to be concluded during the first half of 2019, after which we will see much better alignment across projects as well as improved operational efficiency across the company. The investments made in 2018 have been a significant cornerstone to build a solid foundation for the company's product pipeline. Next Games has an extraordinarily committed staff and I look forward to together continue develop the company, our culture and values further in 2019.

After the reporting period in January 2019, Next Games and Universal Games and Digital Platforms came to an agreement over terminating their collaboration on the game project that had proceeded to production. Investments and Acquisitions

Cash flow and Financing

Cash and cash equivalents of the company decreased EUR -19.1 million to EUR 7.3 million (EUR 26.4 million) as at 31 December 2018. The decrease of cash balance was primarily due to heavy marketing investments for the global launch of The Walking Dead: Our World mobile game. Company's equity ratio remained at a good level 65% (87%). The company has an unused credit limit of 5 million euros.

The company finances its operations primarily by equity financing and cash flow from operating activities. Company has also received funding from Business Finland in the form of governmental grants and loans. The total nominal value of loans received from Business Finland was EUR 0.8 million as at December 31, 2018.

As reported in the company's Q3 2018 business review, Next Games also assesses alternatives to strengthen its current financial position, to secure future product development and to support the company's marketing investments for future growth.

Game and Product Development Pipeline

The Walking Dead: Our World

The innovative location-based augmented reality game, The Walking Dead: Our World was launched globally on July 12. With this product Next Games is one of the pioneers in developing products utilizing AR and location, as these technologies, and specifically combining the two technologies within one product, requires specific technical expertise.

The company made significant marketing investments on a global scale, and specifically in the game's key markets, the US and the largest markets in Europe, in pursuit of significant revenue growth. Based on the game's monetization potential, the company sought to achieve one million daily active users (DAU) level during the weeks following the launch, and based its marketing plans on this goal. During the first weeks, the company succeeded in acquiring a significant amount of daily players, at the same time as reaching the company's expectations for the game's key operational metrics, retention and monetization. The game achieved top 50 grossing list ranking (list measuring game revenue) in multiple key markets.

As the number of players in the game increased during the first weeks, some technical challenges were encountered, which adversely impacted the game's functionality and had a negative impact on revenue development for the game. As a consequence, the company elected to scale back the game's marketing investment to a considerably lower than planned level. Prior to the technical challenges, The Walking Dead: Our World reached a level of 625 thousand daily active users.

The technical challenges that affected the game in 2018 have been resolved towards the end of the fourth quarter of 2018. The game's marketing investments remained on a conservative level for the duration of 2018 while technical fixes have been delivered. The team continues to further develop the game both from a technical and content perspectives in 2019.

The Walking Dead: No Man's Land

The Walking Dead: No Man's Land development and live operations continued throughout 2018. The team has been able to keep engagement and revenue on a stable level, customary to the game by utilizing a mixture of tried and tested as well as new live-operations campaigns and in-game events. With the "Summer of Explosions" event, the team tested a new structure for an event that requires longer term commitment to achieve a goal with good results. This structure was further used and iterated for the holiday campaigns at the end of the year. Another notable addition to the game was the "Guild Wars" feature, where players can team up with other players and compete to win rewards. The game was also released for the Japanese market in July, where it was well-received.

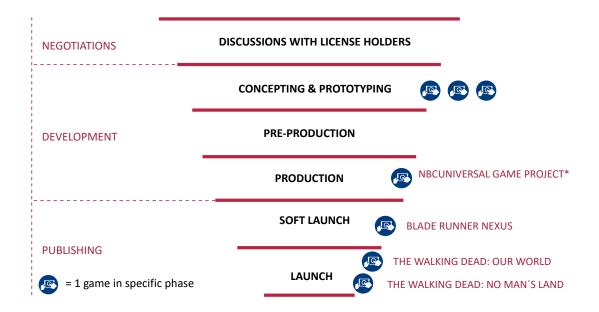

Blade Runner Nexus

The game based on Blade Runner movie franchise has been in development throughout 2018. The game entered technical soft launch in July 2018 and opened in three additional markets after the reporting period in January 2019. During the first half of 2019 the game's soft launch will proceed and more information on the game's potential launch schedule released as information becomes available.

Unannounced Projects

Next Games has continued to maintain relationships with key license holders throughout 2018. Next Games signed a new license agreement during the third quarter with a leading entertainment IP holder for an extremely sought-after license. After the reporting period in January 2019, Next Games and Universal Games and Digital Platforms came to an agreement over terminating their collaboration on the game project that had proceeded to production.

Additionally, Next Games has put some focus on internal concepting and prototyping processes to foster and improve on current technology, features and learnings, and has a new project group formed around a game concept that is not attached to a third party IP at the moment.

Games-as-a-Service Technology Platform

The purpose of the shared technology platform is to offer a shared backend solution and tools for all the company's games in order to increase code reusability across projects and thus reduce time and effort spent on basics for each game.

Next Games has partnered with Microsoft to utilize Microsoft's cloud service and other managed service offerings to build a scalable and easy to maintain foundation for the platform without having to build each system in-house. Relying on an established external partner helps Next Games to efficiently operate the platform with a compact internal team.

Based on its technology strategy, Next Games started the development of its shared technology platform in 2013 and the two first games running on the platform were the company's first release Compass Point: West and The Walking Dead: No Man's Land in 2016.

In late 2016, the company renewed the platform and changed some of the key core technologies to ensure it would be able to support several types of game features, to achieve efficient maintainability as well as the ability to support multiple versions of the same game simultaneously, which removes the need of player-facing maintenance breaks as updates happen in the background.

The first game to run on the second iteration of the platform was The Walking Dead: Our World, launched in July 2018. One of the key requirements for the location-based The Walking Dead: Our World, was to resolve the potential challenge of thousands of players viewing and playing the game simultaneously in a certain location, and thus the need to present the actions of other players in real-time. The solution, called "unlimited persistent shared location", is one of the key achievements of the platform, and simultaneously an incredibly difficult technical challenge to resolve.

During the weeks following the launch of The Walking Dead: Our World, and as the number of players in the game increased, some technical challenges related to the "unlimited persistent shared location" solution, were encountered, which adversely impacted the game's functionality. The technical challenges that affected the game in 2018 have been resolved during the fourth quarter of 2018 in collaboration with Next Games' technology partner Microsoft.

Since the resolution of the technical challenges, the technology team has focused on optimizing the platform costs as well as supporting multiple live games on it in a cost effective way. The platform currently now also serves Blade Runner: Nexus, the company's third licensed game currently in soft launch.

Risks and Uncertainties

Next Games' revenue in the first half of 2018 was almost solely related to The Walking Dead: No Man's Land, a licensed game developed by the company. In July 2018 the company launched The Walking Dead: Our World, the company is highly dependent on the sales from these titles. There are significant marketing investments involved in the launch of a new game, of which the returns carry a risk. The company has also utilized both its own and third party technology that is new, and which may carry a scalability risk.

Losses incurred in the third quarter relating to the global launch of The Walking Dead: Our World had a significant impact on the company's cash position. If the company's turnaround project is not successful, or if no additional capital is raised, it may carry a significant risk relating to the company's ability to launch new titles and it may affect overall liquidity for the company.

It is essential for the business of Next Games that the company is able to develop its current and future games as well as improve its games so that the players will continue to play its games and make purchases within them. Delays in game development may affect cash flow negatively.

Fluctuations in the USD - EUR currency rates has an impact to Next Games' financial results which are reported in euros. Currency fluctuations may also affect liquidity as the company has receivables and liabilities in both currencies. Currency risk is managed with currency denominated bank accounts.

The company has capitalized expenses related to game development, of which future profits are uncertain. In addition, in accordance with IFRS, Next Games has valued goodwill and other assets based on future outlook of the company. There is a risk of impairment related to these.

The company has entered into a new licensing deal during 2018 which require upfront minimum guarantee payments, some of which are recoupable through royalties. If such game projects are terminated there is a risk of write-off related to the original minimum guarantee payment.

The company has insured its business with customary insurances for cyber security, business interruption and property.

It is essential for the business of Next Games that the company is able to develop its current and future games as well as improve its games so that players will continue to play its games and make purchases within them. Delays in game development may affect cash flow negatively.

Risks other than those described above may have an impact on Next Games' business.

ARPDAU (Average Revenue Per Daily Active User). ARPDAU is calculated by dividing daily gross bookings by daily active users (DAU). ARPDAU is an important measure of monetization as it places sales in relation to player volume.
